A Guide To Headers And Touch Lines From The Masters Of Footers And Chalk Lines.

How To Look Like An From The Very First

It's a whistle. And it signals the start of a game whose general aim is quite apparent: score a goal. However, nuance is the name of this game. And until you know where to look, and why, you might end up having the time of your life for all the wrong reasons.

And, of course, that won't do at all!

Every Player Holds A Position Of Responsibility

But knowing those responsibilities is the trick. And frankly, just knowing the names of the positions can be quite a feat in itself.

Consider this: a forward, a striker and a wing are basically the same player. But different coaches use different terms. Now, when it comes to calling players names, you'd probably like to know what you're doing. So let's start with the front line.

This decidedly offensive trio is out there, basically, to score. And they're known as the "left wing, the right wing and the center"... or as the "forwards"... or maybe as the "strikers."

Working our way back toward the goalie, we next come to the mid-field line, or the "halfbacks." These guys handle the transition from defense to offense, controlling the center of the field.

The Defense... Their Goal Is To Prevent A Goal

Between the midfield line and the goalie, we find a right back, a left back and a stopper. These guys were born to play defense. And, theoretically, they should never cross onto the offensive side of the field. In reality, though, you'll often find them moving up to fill open spaces and help press the attack. (But they'd better be back where they belong in the event of a turnover... or the coach will be calling them names you won't see printed here.)

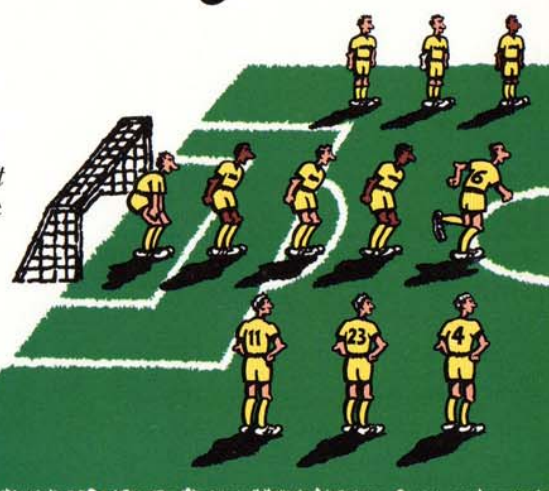

Two other positions figure in on defense: the sweeper back and the goalie. Try to think of the sweeper back as a freelance, free-spirited defensive type. He's assigned to go anywhere he's needed on defense, to lend a hand. But if his free spirit carries him all the way up to the front line, he's being a little too free... and creating a defensive weakness.

So call him a name.

The Goalie... Much More Than Just A Sitting Duck.

As you'll see during the game, the fellow in the net is much more than just a sitting duck. He can also be a diving duck. Or a jumping duck. (But not, we hope, a ducking duck.)

His job is to stop any ball that's shot at the goal. But there's a very real strategy to this, and that is: grab the ball! This guy's allowed to use his hands, and, unless he does, the ball is likely to keep bouncing out in front of the goal after every block, giving the offense endless chances to score.

Once he's grabbed the ball, he has the option of passing or kicking it upfield to his own offensive players, who (we hope) are alertly scrambling down the field.

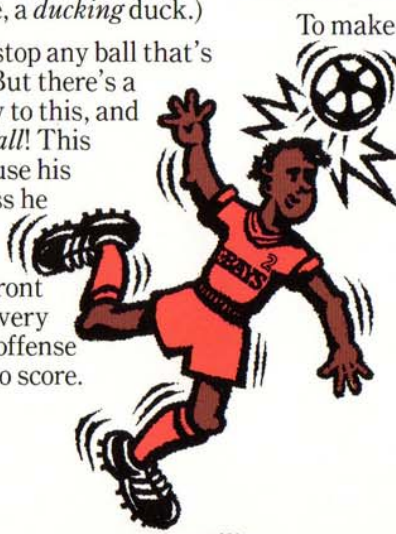

And, if he's not careful, getting called for "offsides."

The Offsides Penalty—Confusing For Most Fans (And Far Too Many Players!)

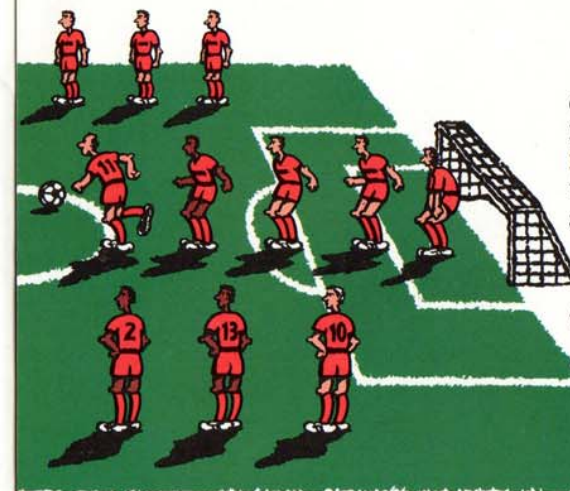

One downright frustrating way for a team to lose the ball is to have a player called offsides. And this happens when an overzealous player, looking for a chance to score, ends up speeding ahead of the ball, his team, the other team, and anything else on the field.

To make it simple: if you're heading into the opponent's territory and the ball is behind you, you should have at least two defensive players in front of you. (Their goalie counts as one defensive player.)

It's that simple... er... almost.

Experienced Soccer Fan Horn...Er, Gun...Um...

If it's one of a certain nine serious fouls, your team will get a direct free kick. That means you'll kick it from a set point on the field—with the defense in your way, of course—and if it goes straight in, it counts.

Lesser fouls earn you indirect free kicks—in which the ball has to touch someone else (friend or foe) before it goes in.

Last but not least, there's the penalty kick. This is awarded when the defense fouls an offensive player inside the penalty area:

the area marked in front of the goal. Since the offense was so close to begin with, one of their players is given a free kick from a spot marked before the goal... with only the goalie there to try and stop it.

The goalie can't move until the ball is kicked... so his only option is to try and second-guess the kicker. Fairly often, then, he'll end up stretched out, sailing to cover the left corner of the goal, as the ball sails cleanly into the net on the right side.

But that's not the only amusing sight in this sport. For example, if you've not seen a lot of soccer before, you'll be amazed at how thoughtlessly these fellows use their heads. See, it's perfectly legal to punch the ball around the field with your head—the move is called a header—and pulling off a precise one is simply a matter of... uh... clear thinking.

A Subject That's Out Of Bounds...

Those white lines on the side of the field are called touch lines. And they mark the out-of-bounds on the side. When the ball goes all the way out on the side, the other team gets to throw it back in... overhead... using both hands.

If the ball goes out over an end line, one of two things happens. If the offense kicked it out, the defense gets it. Play is restarted with a goal kick by the goalie, from a set location.

If the defense kicked it out, the offense restarts play with a corner kick. The ball is set at the corner on the side it went out, and an offensive player kicks it back in. In this case, he'll usually kick toward the center or toward the goal, hoping that a teammate will be in a perfect position to drill the ball home!

And that's the game of soccer, except for a couple dozen other details that you'll likely figure out for yourself. Like ties (which are settled with a series of penalty kicks).

And timeouts...

How To Find A Home The Next...Um...

Sorry, there are no such things as standard timeouts in this game... the clock stops only for injuries and at special times at the referee's discretion.

There is, however, a 15-minute halftime, and that'll be a great time to check out the five "home teams" that have made this special guide possible...

BritAm Development Group (the Bay's main sponsors). Consolidated Homes. Diversified Homes. Ryan Homes. And The Ryland Group.

Or, better yet, make it a point to take the program home. Then you'll be ready to find your perfect home—at home—at your leisure.

BritAm And A Top Notch Team Of Builders—Proud To Back The Bays

BritAm Development Group—one of the fastest growing developers in the region—works with many of Maryland's top home builders in creating exceptional communities. And we're delighted that four of them have teamed with us to back the Maryland Bays.

The Bays represent the future of soccer in the United States—a true hometown club with lots of local talent. And we're proud to support a group that's so much a part of our local community.

It's nice to be able to take time out from our footers (the joints at the base of a house, where the cement floor extends beyond the foundation) and our chalk lines (a length of chalk-coated string, strung from point to point and snapped down to mark a straight line) to enjoy the Bay's headers and touch line play.

And it's nice to play a part in bringing the team to you.

BritAm—Developing Excitement In A Dozen Communities

Look at the map and you'll see why hundreds of demanding home buyers are finding our developments exciting... and most attractive; we're developing communities right where everybody wants to be!

Just down the road.

A Brief Commercial On Our Commercial Development

In addition to our residential work, BritAm is also building business space for Central Maryland. Among our projects: the 35,000 sq. ft. Center 32, an office/R&D building just off Route 32 in Laurel; the 60,000 sq. ft. Clarksville Shopping Center; and our prime commercial creation, the 102-acre Montpelier Research Park, just off Route 29, south of Columbia.

Whether in the world of residential or commercial real estate, BritAm is working to provide the best buildings possible to the best people in America: the people of Central Maryland. If you're in the market for a new home, please check out any of the developments listed here. We—and our affiliated builders—would be delighted to have you visit.

And if you're not looking for a home right now, perhaps we can be of help in the future. So hang on to this guide. Use it to follow the game. And, some day, you may just follow it to a brand new home...
